

When your clinic stops replying

A patient checklist for preserving records and preparing a first legal review after treatment in Türkiye.

1. Arrange appropriate care

If symptoms continue or worsen, seek suitable medical assessment. Keep the findings and treatment advice. Legal preparation should not delay necessary care.

2. Preserve the communication timeline

Keep full messages, emails, photographs, voice notes and call logs, with available dates and sender details. Export chats and retain originals and the source device where practicable. An undelivered message or missing profile picture does not prove why contact failed.

3. Request the treatment record

Send an identifiable written request for relevant examination, consent, operative, anaesthesia, discharge and follow-up records. Keep the request, delivery evidence and response. Ask for advice if access remains unresolved.

4. Identify the provider and payments

Record the doctor, facility, intermediary and payment recipient. Keep contracts, invoices, transfers and booking messages. A trading name may differ from the responsible legal entity.

5. Check the legal route and deadline

Provide treatment dates, discovery dates and prior notices or proceedings to a Turkish lawyer. Different claims have different time rules. Do not assume a clinic complaint pauses a court deadline or that every step can happen remotely.

6. Review offers and formal steps

Obtain independent clinical advice before agreeing to a revision. Have any refund, waiver or settlement terms reviewed. A notary notice may document wording and service; it does not itself prove fault, establish every default consequence or guarantee compensation.

Prepare a short summary: treatment location and date, your concern, provider names and current country. Discuss a suitable sharing method before sending a complete medical file.
